The Tough Truth...

Section 3210(a)(6)(A) provides that a Member may not frank any mass mailing less than 90 days immediately before the date of any primary or general election (whether regular, special, or runoff) in which such Member is a candidate for public office.

~House Committee on Administration, Franking Manual

Congressional rules, like the excerpt above, stipulate that I, as your Member of Congress, can no longer communicate with you for the next 90 days unless you give me permission by clicking here. My job is to both serve you and communicate with you. With so many policy decisions coming in the next few months, it is imperative that you and I continue to communicate as much as possible. But we can only do so if you give me permission by clicking here.

Over the past few weeks, you have received two emails from me: the Washington Watch and the District Connection. The Washington Watch provides important policy information including descriptions of votes I've made, surveys on how you feel about certain policy decisions, as well as links to videos of floor speeches, press conferences, and more.

The District Connection offers a local perspective. Here, I focus on the information I have learned from constituents, small businesses, students, and community leaders. The District Connection also provides announcements for opportunities for us to meet, like the Town Hall Meeting Announcement further down in this email.

Both of these publications offer important information straight from my desk to yours. But again, Congressional rules will prevent me from communicating with you for most of the remainder of 2012 unless you give me permission to do so. By clicking here, you will give me that permission and we will continue to keep our communication strong.

Know What's Happening.

Ensure that you continue receiving Congressman Woodall's latest updates from D.C. and the Seventh District.

Our Founding Fathers understood that an active dialogue between elected officials and their constituents would be a cornerstone of success for our Republic. One needs to look no further than the U.S. Constitution to see their intent. Unfortunately, America has moved away from their vision over the years. However, I am committed to restoring that vision and to returning decision-making power to the American people.

The best way to start that restoration process is right here at home. These upcoming Town Halls will be the tenth and eleventh Town Hall Meetings we have hosted this year. Hopefully, there will be many more to come. If you cannot attend one of these Town Hall Meetings, please sign up here to continue receiving updates on when the next round of Town Hall Meetings will be. As always, please know that you can always contact my office with any ideas, questions, or concerns you may have.

We have a unique--yet challenging--opportunity to ensure that our Republic remains the greatest in the world, not just for us, but for future generations. Last week, I had the pleasure of meeting with Duluth High School students who were in Washington, D.C., for the National History Bowl. That same day, I flew home to join the Georgia Association of College Republicans for their annual convention. What remains in my mind from these visits is the optimism of these young adults about America's future. I share that optimism, and you and I share the responsibility of bringing it to fruition.

From the looks on the faces of the Duluth High schoolers when they saw the Capitol Dome up close from my office, to the dinner prayer of the College Republicans giving thanks for our liberty and freedom, there is not a doubt in my mind that our nation's young people are not only aware of how amazing our nation truly is, but they are committed to preserving it just as much as we are.

I thank these students and the hundreds of others with whom I have met either in Washington, D.C., or back home in the Seventh District, for their passion and their commitment to freedom. Thank you for all that you do.

Sincerely,

Rob Woodall
Member of Congress
